Canadian company Cervélo has obviously caught the imagination of the British cycling public with the lightweight, yet aerodynamic Carbon Soloist. The real jewel in its crown, and no doubt the sparkle that caught your imagination, is the fact that you get comfort plus speed with this machine.

Ridden to yellow-clad glory by Jens Voigt last July it's the epitome of cool, pro machinery. A favourite for the Race Bike of the Year, we'll have to wait until next August to see if it can trounce the Italian competition.

The voting: Votes were very spread out this year, but still a clear winner was evident in the shape of CSC's team machine, the Cervélo Carbon Soloist.

What was missing? There wasn't too much of a surprise in the top three, and the rest of your votes went to the usual suspects: Trek, Time, Cannondale, Specialized and, of course, the Raleigh Chopper. There's always one.
